5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

NATE HOMAN, REPORTER

ICNA Relief USA's Massachusetts Field Office and other local Islamic faith groups are coming together to deliver food and goods to TSA workers and other government employees at Logan Airport who are working without a paycheck during the government shutdown. There are about 8,200 federal workers who are not receiving a paycheck while President Donald Trump and Congress remain deadlocked over funding a border wall.

RONALDO ACCEPTS FINE FOR TAX EVASION, NO JAIL

1 Portuguese soccer star Cristiano Ronaldo was fined almost 19 million euros ($21.6 million) for tax fraud on Tuesday but will avoid serving a 23-month prison sentence after agreeing to a deal. Ronaldo, holding hands with his Spanish fiancée Georgina Rodriguez, came out of the courtroom smiling, pausing to sign autographs before leaving in a black van. The 33-year-old Juventus forward, who played for Real Madrid from 2009-18, agreed to settle the case by paying an 18.8 million euro fine and accepting a suspended jail sentence. Under Spanish law, a first offender can serve anything less than a two-year sentence under probation and Ronaldo will not have to go to prison. His court appearance lasted about 15 minutes as the five-time world footballer of the year only needed to sign off on the previously settled agreement. The trial of Ronaldo's former Real Madrid teammate Xabi Alonso, also in court on Tuesday over accusations of tax fraud, was suspended, a court magistrate said. Prosecutors were seeking a five-year jail sentence and a fine of 4 million euros for Spaniard Alonso, who retired as a player in 2017.

CHRIS BROWN RELEASED BY FRENCH POLICE

2 Singer Chris Brown, who was arrested in Paris on Monday with two other people on suspicion of rape, has been released from police custody, the French prosecutor's office said. The police are still investigating the case, the French prosecutor's office added. The arrests were first reported by Closer magazine, which said Brown, his bodyguard and a friend were detained after a 24-year-old woman alleged she was raped at the singer's suite at the Mandarin Oriental hotel on the night of Jan. 15. The woman said she had met the men at a Paris nightclub earlier in the evening, according to the magazine. Neither Brown nor his agents responded to requests for comment. Brown, 29, whose previous legal troubles include assaulting singer Rihanna in 2009, had remained in custody on Tuesday, a judicial source said. Brown pleaded guilty to assaulting then-girlfriend Rihanna in an incident that made headlines around the world when a photo of her bruised face was released. In 2016, Brown was arrested in Los Angeles after a woman said he had pointed a gun at her. Brown denied any wrongdoing.

GREENPEACE PROTEST IN FRONT OF NIEDERAUSSEM POWER PLANT

US PLAYER JOINS CUBAN BASEBALL LEAGUE

4 A 24-year-old student has become the first U.S. citizen to play in an official Cuban league in around six decades, just as Cubans are batting for Major League Baseball without having to defect under a historic deal made in December. U.S.-Cuban relations have chilled as President Donald Trump turned to Cold War characterizations of the communist-run island, but one would not know from the camaraderie on the baseball field. As a kid, Matthew McLaughlin dreamed of playing for the Boston Red Sox. That dream took a surprising turn when he moved to the largest Caribbean island in 2014 to study Spanish after graduating college. "When I came down to Cuba I realized that my dream was never to play for the Boston Red Sox; it was to pitch for the [Havana team] Industriales," said the blond and burly McLaughlin on a sun-parched baseball field in Havana. Industriales is the most successful team in the Cuban National Series. After introducing himself to the manager of Plaza, which plays in Havana's provincial league, the 6-foot-1, 195-pound pitcher started to train with the team and last year officially became a member.

TRUMP SEEKS TO MOVE AHEAD WITH SPEECH

5 President Donald Trump on Tuesday attempted to move ahead with planning for a State of the Union speech to the U.S. Congress on Jan. 29 despite pressure from Democrats to delay it due to the partial government shutdown. Republican Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said he would bring up Trump's proposal for ending the shutdown — and getting funding for the president's promised border wall — for a vote on Thursday. The plan was unlikely to pass in the Senate and had even less chance in the Democratic-dominated House of Representatives. Trump's cause was hurt on Tuesday by a U.S. Supreme Court ruling regarding "Dreamers," people brought illegally to the United States as children and who had been a key bargaining chip for the Republican president in his wall-funding battle. No clear way was evident to end the shutdown, which began on Dec. 22, increasing the anxiety level of 800,000 federal workers who are furloughed, with some struggling to make ends meet. As the fight over the border wall and government funding raged, a sideshow over Trump's upcoming State of the Union speech also boiled over.

Local Muslim groups to distribute supplies to Logan's unpaid workers

Food and necessities are now available for workers impacted by the government shutdown.

Unpaid Boston TSA workers will have the chance to grab free food after their shifts on Wednesday morning, courtesy of the Islamic Circle of North America Relief USA.

ICNA Relief partnered with Greater New England-area Muslim communities to provide food boxes and a $20 meat voucher from Quincy International Foods Co. to the estimated 1,000 TSA agents working at Boston Logan International Airport without pay.

"This is something that we are compelled to respond to. I believed in the community to support this effort and they have not let me down," ICNA Relief Director Malaika McDonald said.

"Hopefully, the government figures this out, but we are going to start preparing for more gift card drives in case."

This week marks the fifth week of the longest government shutdown in American history, with no end in sight, and the second missed pay cycle since President Donald Trump and U.S. congressional leaders entered a stalemate over a $5.7 billion wall along the border between the U.S. and Mexico. Approximately 8,000 federal workers in Massachusetts are not receiving a paycheck, according to the Massachusetts Office of Labor and Workforce Development.

Abdullahi Nuur, Kadra Maruf, Daniel McKenzie and Malaika MacDonald help distribute food and other items to unpaid workers at Logan.

While Wednesday's mobile food bank is specifically for Logan workers, ICNA Relief has plans to organize more pickups in case SNAP and WIC benefits run out in February.

"We have weekly food drives throughout Massachusetts, but nothing to this scale before," McDonald said.

"It's very scary imagining that things could come to this. We all know someone who is in need."

ICNA Relief offices in Dallas and Atlanta are planning similar distribution projects at their respective airports.

"During this national crisis, it is our duty to stand with our fellow Americans and ensure that no one goes without basic necessities," ICNA Relief Operations Coordinator Kadra Maruf said in a statement. "This is what Americans do. We support one another in times of need."

The distribution center will be open at Boston Logan Airport Terminal C in the Arrivals section from 10 a.m. to noon.

Missing woman found in Charlestown, Boston man charged with kidnapping

A Boston man was charged with kidnapping Olivia Ambrose, the 23-year-old Jamaica Plain resident who was reported missing since leaving a downtown Boston bar Saturday night.

Police arrested Victor Pena, 38, of Charlestown at 49 Walford Way, on Tuesday afternoon.

Ambrose was reported missing on Sunday, after leaving Hennessy's Pub in Faneuil Hall on Saturday night.

Earlier on Tuesday, police released photos of a "person of interest" and assembled a timeline of events surrounding Ambrose's disappearance:

11:04 p.m.: Ambrose is seen leaving a Hennessy's at 25 Union Street with a white male who police determined was not involved in her disappearance.

FACEBOOK

11:42 p.m.: Approximately 40 minutes later, two unknown males are observed inviting Ambrose to walk with them in the area of Congress Street and State Street. One of the males appears to walk ahead while the second male places his arm around Ambrose and directs her toward the State Street MBTA Station. This man, police determined, was Pena.

12:01 a.m.: Approximately 20 minutes later, additional video showed Ambrose being accompanied by Pena, still with his arm around her, exiting the Bunker Hill Community MBTA Station in Charlestown. The other male party was no longer observed in any surveillance video moving forward.

12:13 a.m.: Approximately 10 minutes later, Ambrose and Pena were observed again in the area of Green Street walking together toward Bartlett Street.

A short time later, phone records indicate Ambrose's phone was in the general area of the Bunker Hill Housing Development. Ambrose was taken to a local hospital for evaluations. Additional charges may be filed after police interview Ambrose. NATE HOMAN

A mind-altering conversation with the Lucas Brothers

We sat down with the twin comedy duo before the kickoff of their stand-up tour.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Twins Kenny and Keith Lucas, otherwise known as the hilarious comedy duo The Lucas Bros, have a lot on their minds these days. Their calm and dry delivery may fool some people at first, but the brothers are some of the most creative thinkers going in comedy. We caught up with Kenny and Keith ahead of their stand-up tour to talk about the legalization of drugs and the lasting effects on culture, plus some of the big movie projects they are working on.

So you guys were studying at NYU Law School before starting in comedy. What made you choose such a 180-degree change in your lives?

Kenny: I think it was a combination of that we were both sort of disillusioned with the law school process. I think we both had an inclination that we both wanted to do something else that was artistically inclined.

Keith: We were both very, very dissatisfied with the whole experience. We were both suffering from depression. We both picked up drinking problems. It got really bad. Law school is an incredibly stressful environment and I don't think we really understood what we were getting ourselves into. Once we got there and realized it wasn't what we wanted to do, that's when Kenny started thinking about other alternatives for us to potentially explore. We'd always been fans of stand-up comedy in general, so stand-up sort of served as an outlet for us. So Kenny called me up, and we quit.

In your last Netflix special, "Lucas Brothers: On Drugs," you talk a lot about your experiences with drugs. Do you feel as though drugs inform a lot of your creativity?

Keith: I'm not saying because of drugs, our minds are freer. But I think a combination of marijuana, 'shrooms and philosophy has helped our minds become a little bit more nimble. In law school, there's a rigidity there. Because we studied philosophy, we sort of became freer thinkers and it was kind of tough to conform to that rigidity. By smoking marijuana and doing 'shrooms, it has allowed us to open our minds a little more and it certainly reflects on the comedy that we perform and the things that we write.

Do you think legalization of weed will have an effect on pop culture as a whole?

Keith: Obviously some of the mystery behind weed is the fact that it is illegal. It's seen as rebellious when you smoke weed. When it gets legalized and everyone starts to smoke, I think it will lose a little bit of its edge in terms of cultural rebellion. You're not gonna get Cheech and Chong anymore. It's going to be ubiquitous and you're going to get people to claim that it's healthy in many ways. I think we'll find other ways to be creative. I don't know if weed is a prerequisite for being your most creative. I just want people to stop getting locked up for smoking weed. I'll take that over the creative stimulus.

You're also working on a script for your own feature film with Judd Apatow. How is that process coming along?

Kenny: We have a concept in mind. We wrote a full script but now we're deconstructing that script. Judd's process is fascinating. He likes continuous rewrites. So, even if you have a full script, you have to keep hammering away until it gets to where it needs to be to get shot. It's an incredible process learning filmmaking with one of the greats.

Are you guys developing any other Lucas Brothers projects at the moment?

Kenny: We're certainly toying with different ideas. We have some live-action ideas that we're developing. We have some animated ideas that we're developing. We're just trying to keep our hands in a little bit of everything. But for now, we're also developing our new hour. So yeah, we're just trying to stay busy, man. Working on as many different things as possible.

The Lucas Brothers will be performing at the ONCE ballroom in Somerville tonight.

Heléne Yorke and Drew Tarver talk 'The Other Two'

Did you know that Justin Bieber has siblings? He does, but since they're the brother and sisters of one of the world's most popular pop singers, most people probably don't even know that they exist.

This is the general idea behind "The Other Two," a Comedy Central series from former "Saturday Night Live" co-head writers Chris Kelly and Sarah Schneider. Ahead of the show's premiere on Thursday, Metro spoke to stars Heléne Yorke and Drew Tarver about the series.

The conversation went in many directions, but one of the more interesting had to do with the pair's fictional younger brother Chase Dreams, who's played by Case Walker in the series. Most audiences will probably assume that Yorke and Tarver's characters, Brooke and Cary, don't actually like their younger brother Chase. Some might even assume that they're jealous of his sudden stardom. These assumptions are refreshingly wrong.

Heléne Yorke and Drew Tarver open up about "The Other Two." COMEDY CENTRAL

"I think it's refreshing that that kind of resentment doesn't have a place in the show," says Yorke. "It is something that, when you hear this premise, you would think that some obvious family high jinks are about to go down. Instead, our characters take it as an opportunity to inform their own growth, which has its own selfish aspects. You watch us go through that, as well as certain shades of resentment, animosity and jealousy. But they're never mean about it."

"This obviously comes from Chris and Sarah's writing on the show, which is fantastic," adds Tarver. "Brooke and Cary are probably very jealous of Chase, but they deal with it in a way that most people would in real life. Which is to say, they talk behind other people's backs. You know it's bad, what you're feeling, but you also know that you should be better. Plus, it's our little brother and we're genuinely worried about him. We don't want this to ruin his life, but we also want it to improve ours."

It should come as no surprise to everyone who tunes in on Thursday that Yorke and Tarver have siblings of their own. Kelly and Schneider's writing on "The Other Two" definitely lends plenty of credence to the onscreen depiction of familial love, but the actors' performances pull just as much from their own lived experiences.

"I ended up doing a chemistry read with Drew and we immediately connected as siblings," Yorke explains. "Both Drew and I come from big families. He has two sisters and I have two brothers. So I think connecting as siblings is something that we're both very well-versed in."

"The Other Two" premieres Thursday, Jan. 24, at 10:30 p.m. on Comedy Central.

New North End hotspot is all about the classics

Who doesn't love spaghetti and meatballs? ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

If you're looking for a great Italian dinner in Boston, there's no better neighborhood to explore than the North End. Thanks to its large Italian-American population and collection of amazing Italian restaurants, the area is clearly deserving of its Little Italy title. Now, Tony & Elaine's hopes to become a new North End favorite by focusing on the classics.

After opening a trio of successful ventures with Ward 8, North Square Oyster and Bodega Canal, Nick Frattaroli is expanding his culinary reach with the launch of Tony & Elaine's. Set to officially open on Feb. 4, the latest North End hotspot aims to be a "throwback" to the neighborhood's roots, according to Frattaroli.

Tony & Elaine's, a name that pays tribute to Frattaroli's parents who worked for years as servers in North End restaurants, will feature elevated takes on all your favorite Italian classics.

Tony & Elaine's already has award-winning meatballs, and it isn't even open yet.

"We're going for an old-school, Italian-American, 1970s vibe with the space throughout, and also the menu," Frattaroli tells Metro. "Think chicken parm, pink vodka sauce — all those dishes that people have come to love over the years."

Located on 111 N. Washington St., the space is an homage to the hole-in-the-wall neighborhood joints that have dominated the area for decades. And just like those old-school restaurants, Tony & Elaine's isn't cutting any corners with its menu. All the pasta will be made by hand in house each day and each dish will feature the freshest ingredients possible.

While many Italian restaurants have started to shy away from beloved comfort food items like chicken parmigiana, Tony & Elaine's chef Eric Buonagurio hopes to elevate these classics with his menu. Other highlights include lobster ravioli, fried calamari, bolognese and all sorts of red sauce favorites.

"[Other restaurants] have this thing in their head where they almost have to reinvent stuff, when the classic stuff's the best," Frattaroli says.

Tony & Elaine's may not be open yet, but it's already racking up awards. Chef Buonagurio and the Tony & Elaine's team took home the top prize at the first annual "North End Best Meatball" competition during the Fisherman's Feast festivities over the summer, so expect that dish to be a fan favorite when the restaurant finally opens.

THE NFL IS BROKEN AND THEY DON'T REALLY CARE AT ALL

OPINION

JOE PANTORNO
@JoePantorno

Structurally, the NFL is the worst league in professional North American sports. Sunday's AFC and NFC Championship games further proved that.

Once again, one of the biggest days in sports was marred by poor officiating, puzzling rules and sheer ignorance from the powers that be. And it clearly decided who was going down to Atlanta to meet in Super Bowl LIII.

To put it plainly, the New Orleans Saints and Kansas City Chiefs were done in by a blown pass interference call and a coin toss.

Before you NFL junkies — who like to die on every hill when it comes to defending this league — get after it, I just want to tell you how much I abhor going after officials or technicalities or commissioners. Usually, when those kinds of thoughts creep into my mind I think I'm more deserving of wearing a tinfoil hat and coming up with conspiracy theories in my basement.

However, Sunday provided quite a stain for the so-called most popular sporting league in the United States.

The NFC Championship Game saw the Los Angeles Rams gifted with another life after defensive back Nickell Robey-Coleman eviscerated New Orleans' Tommylee Lewis on a 3rd-&-10 pass from Drew Brees on the Rams' 13-yard line.

Had the officiating crew led by Bill Vinovich contained eyes, a brain, or possibly different motives, it would have given the Saints an automatic first down with 1:45 left in the game, with the game tied at 20 apiece.

The Saints would have then had an easy opportunity to run the clock down and kick a game-winning field goal as time expired.

Instead, New Orleans had to kick a field goal and give the ball back to the Rams, who went down and tied the game before winning it in overtime.

After the game, Saints head coach Sean Payton received a call from NFL head of officiating Al Riveron saying that Vinovich's crew had gotten the call wrong.

The officiating crew led by Bill Vinovich (above) missed a crucial pass interference penalty that would have clinched a victory for the New Orleans Saints in the NFC Championship Game. GETTY IMAGES

Gee, what consolation. Basically, an incompetent official's incompetent boss said "my bad." That doesn't change the fact that the Rams are going to the Super Bowl instead of the Saints.

It kind of makes you wonder if things would have been called differently if the roles were reversed. After all, the Rams being in the Super Bowl is a huge win for the NFL as they try to grow the game's legitimacy in Los Angeles, a major sports market that has been stubborn to accept the league.

Hold on, let me put my tinfoil hat away.

It would be tough to top that display of head-scratching ineptitude from the NFL, but it was only the beginning as the AFC Championship Game between the New England Patriots and Chiefs saw a classic slugfest hindered by governing issues.

Sure, there was plenty of poor officiating, including a ridiculous roughing the passer call on Chiefs pass rusher Chris Jones, whose arm hit the shoulder of Tom Brady that gifted the Patriots a first down. New England was trailing 21-17 with 7:05 left in the game with the call, gifting them an automatic first down instead of it being 3rd-&-7.

Granted, the Patriots were a machine when it came to converting third downs on Sunday night. And the Chiefs shot themselves in the foot plenty of times, most notably when Dee Ford canceled out the game-winning interception when he lined up in the neutral zone.

The biggest problem with how things ended in Kansas City was that the Chiefs never got a chance to touch the football in overtime.

The NFL's rules for the extra period, in which the game ends if the team that gets the ball first scores a touchdown, basically puts a team's entire season on the chances of a coin toss. It's mind-boggling how in a conference title game, both offenses can't get at least one possession of the football.

You're going to tell me only Brady deserved a chance at getting the ball, and not Patrick Mahomes, because of a coin toss? Neither defense was going to stop either quarterback in overtime Sunday night. It's only logical that, at least for the postseason, the Chiefs got the ball for a chance to force a double overtime.

A variation of this idea has worked in college football for years. How can the NCAA, which is one of the most corrupt organizations on the planet, have this right and not the NFL?

It just doesn't make any sense. And I wish the issues stopped there, but they don't.

A report from ESPN's Adam Schefter on Sunday revealed that former Chiefs running back Kareem Hunt has been receiving interest from "multiple teams," and that he'll be signed by an NFL franchise "sooner rather than later." Hunt was cut by the Chiefs in late November when a video surfaced of him shoving and kicking a woman, actions that should never see the rusher wear an NFL uniform again, at the least.

Yet, this just further proves that if you're talented, the NFL will look the other way on basic human values because the only thing they really care about is the almighty dollar. Anything else some fan or official tells you is a boldfaced lie.

But hey, enjoy the Super Bowl.
